NUMBER 37.

Imperial Male Minstrels.

The performance of the Imperial Male Minstrels was given before a large audience Thursday evening, at the Opera House.

The stage presented a gay appearance with its red and purple chair covers and crimson background, each side flanked by a large American flag.

The interlude, Ned Burnett wore a Louis XVI suit. The black faced men wore scarlet and yellow and the white trunks. The costumes were from Brown of Portland. Shaw's orchestra of seven pieces furnished excellent music.

The big hit of the evening was Ralph Andrews' encore to his song, "Over the Ocean Wave." "Over the Ocean Wave" was a parody on the song about Freeland Home's dancing classes.

Jameson Finney's work as end man was excellent and his song "On the 5:15" was given a round of applause.

Wm. Horne's solo "Over the Ocean Wave" was undoubtedly the musical gem of the evening. "Brutus" Farnham's song "Where the Southern Roses Grow" with chorus by Fred and Harold Moore and "Buster" Brown was excellent.

Features of the Olio were the beautiful come solo of Frank Knapp, the work of the Imperial quartette, H. and F. Moore, H. W. Brown and Harold Anderson, who sang popular songs in a pleasing manner with Mrs. Fred Moore at the piano. "Those Classy Boys" and "Way from Home," in a manner typical of two homesick youths. The end men comedians entertained the audience with their humorous skits.

A surprise not given on the program was the graceful dancing of Richard Mathewson from Oxford and Florence Moberg of New York.

The last number was the clever musical act of Win Kimball the "Popular Sketch Artist." The whole show was very well presented and all the parts well taken. The show a dance was given by Shaw's Orchestra.

Masonic Picnic.

The Masons had a picnic, Monday, Labor Day, at Fred E. Smith's cottage at Lake Umbagog. The Masons took beans in the ground and there were different varieties of the beans cooked so each one could have their favorite kind. The Masons also made coffee for all. Baskets of food in addition to the beans were those attending. Per-sonally, the most exciting moment was when the "bean hole" was announced to be opened, as this was to many a novel sight.

The hours for the picnic were from ten through the afternoon, did they wish to stay, which most of those present did and it was six o'clock before several of them did go to their houses.

There were 180 at the picnic made up of Masons and their families. The time was spent socially and family work held the attention of some of the ladies. An interesting ball game was played. Pitching quarts and tables of whist claimed others, and in the afternoon the dining room was cleared for dancing, music furnished by A. M. Dunham, and this proved to be a popular part of the day's exercises.

The Daisy club composed of the children of Etha Noyes Sunday school class, held a sale at the home of Mrs. L. E. Bennett's, which proved a success.

A fancy table, candy table and a bundle of table was stocked by the little folks with much enthusiasm and interest. The tables were neatly arranged and decorated with flowers. The proceeds, the club used to purchase fruit for the sick and shut-ins.

A Suprise Concert.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Stone was the scene of a very delightful social affair last Friday evening, when Beatrice Stone, assisted by Mrs. Elmer Packard, gave a farewell surprise party to Clara B. Shepard. Since Miss Shepard is to continue her musical study at the New England Conservatory of Music next year, the events of the evening took the form of a concert.

After an usher issued programs to the audience, the first number was found to be a Footlight song by Kevin. This consisted of walking a tape while looking through a pair of inverted opera glasses.

In the Orchestra Trials by Sousa each guest was required to play an imaginary instrument and the others were supposed to guess the instrument intended.

Since no gathering of maidens is complete without a glimpse into the alluring future, Miss Shepard's future was disclosed to her friends by means of the third number with the suggestion of "Love Old Sweet Song." This was rendered by Mrs. Carl E. Stone, who read a portion of the story, and by Marion Gibson, who played selections with suitable words on the piano. Each guest entered on her program the names of the songs whenever she could recognize them.

The musical ability of each young lady was proved by the rendering of musical selections from Chopin. Each one was required to play some familiar tune on a comb and the others guessed the title.

All of the guests rendered the Grand Final by playing together on combs.

The first prize for concert work was awarded to Mildred Curtis and the bobby prize to Christine Leavitt.

At this moment the doors were opened and the dining room, dressed in pink and white and lighted by candles, was revealed in all its daintiness. Before the performers were allowed to partake of its inviting refreshments, they were obliged to hunt for the favors, tiny number of real leather, which were hidden about the room. A delicious lunch of crab salad, hot rolls, pineapple frappe, macaroons and other dainties were served.

At the close of the evening, Miss Shepard was asked to play on the violin, in the playing of which she is a young artist of much promise. She was much surprised to find her violin case filled with gifts from friends. Good wishes completed this very happy musical evening.

Those invited were Misses Clara Shepard, Marion Gibson, Mildred Curtis, Mildred Noyes, Doris Shepard, Christine Leavitt, Ruth Noble, Pearl Foster, Myra Noble, Winnifred McKean, Rena Wood and Eula K. Bicknell.

AN OLD FOGY

So thought the Other Fellows.
 His fellow workmen used to laugh at him when he was a young man. They said he was old-fashioned, out of date, and they told him he was missing the best of his life. He got about twelve dollars a week in those days—never more than that—and he was still working right along—and now he gets eighteen and sometimes twenty.

They thought he was queer. You see, he used to take his money home and give it to his wife—all of it. She was the family banker. Though he was a young man in those days, he never seemed to have time for hanging around the saloon. There was always something to do at home. His wife wasn't very strong, and in those days there was generally a baby or two that needed attention.

Then he had a garden that kept him busy in the summer, and a shop where he used to do odd jobs for himself or the neighbors, and there were chickens to take care of and some other things to market. The boys in the shop thought he was an old fogy.

Well, he is old now, and how does it stand with him. He owns the home he lives in, and it's a good one, and he owns another that rents for more than he ever used to pay when he was young. His children are grown; they all went through high school, and one of the boys went to college. They are the kind of children that the neighbors say "turned out."

He has a comfortable bank account in his wife's name—and he goes right along spending just a little less than he earns. And the old boys in the shop, what few there are left of them, will tell you they understand his wife had some money left her, and that's what gave him his start. And they are right, in a way. She had some money left her every Saturday night.

If you ask the old man how he did it, he'll tell you he didn't do it—he did it. And that's the right way. In a way. It takes two to play that kind of a game, and it isn't an easy one, making the money go every week just a bit less than the income. And there are a great many other things to be taken into account. For, after all, thrift is a habit of mind, it's a way of looking at life, and nothing is too big or too little to have a place in it.

Wise buying, careful saving in the household, the prevention of waste in all manner of little ways, such things as these count for much in the course of a year, and they count for a great deal in the course of a lifetime. But they all lead up to the main thing, which is keeping out of debt and putting a little money every month into the savings bank.

It doesn't take financial genius to do it. Hundreds of thrifty people are doing it. Any one can try it. And the advantage in working at it is this, that whether a man is going to turn business upside down and make a name for himself in the commercial world or is simply going to go steadily along as a reliable workman, his success in life depends, first of all, upon thrift.—Berlin Reporter.

WHEN THE FARM ANIMAL IS WOUNDED

In the past, when barbed wire constituted the great bulk of the material used for fencing purposes, wounds on the farm animals were far more common than today. Yet even now, occasionally a valuable cow or horse comes in from the pasture bringing with him a gaping wound that may have been caused by any one of several things. The ability to dress this wound so that it will heal rapidly and leave as little blemish as possible is quite an asset to the farmer or any of the family who happen to possess the required requisites. I have seen such wounds left gaping and a great blemish would result, while on the other hand, even a single stitch would have relieved the difficulty and increased the value of the animal by a good many dollars.

The moment an animal appears with such a wound, drop other work and attend to it at once, for it may mean a saving of dollars. The first is to wash the hands thoroughly. One cannot be too thorough about this, for surgery was never a pronounced success until the great English surgeon demonstrated that most of the infections arising from wounds resulted by contaminations from the hands or instruments of the operator. For the hand wash, use boiled water, adding 15 or 20 drops of carbolic acid to each quart of water. Use a good hand brush and soap; wash the hands thoroughly, being especially careful to get the portions about the nails clean. Of course, any of the patented disinfectants are all right if used according to the recommendations of the manufacturers.

Now one is ready to wash the sore. It must be cleaned out before it can heal. Use carbolic acid water in the same proportions as in the hand wash, being sure that the water has been boiled. A cloth is so likely to become polluted that I find a cotton sponge more satisfactory. Twenty-five cents' worth of absorbent cotton will make a good many sponges and will last for a long time. Break off pieces of this cotton and put into the wash water. These may be taken out of the water, and after using to sponge out the wound, may be thrown away. Be thorough in cleansing the wound.

In the meantime, if the cut is one that should be sewed up, and a surgeon's needle and thread are not at hand, do not leave the wound dangerously gaping for want of a needle. I have seen good work done with an ordinary sewing needle and good linen thread, provided these were clean. If these are all that are available, put the darned needle and some white linen thread in a pie tin on the stove, cover with water and allow to boil for about 10 minutes. With clean hands, clean sore and sanitary thread and needle, proceed to take as many stitches as are needed having them about three-quarters of an inch apart and not getting too near the edge of the wound. Leave the ends of the stitches a little long, so that they may be cut in seven or eight days with a pair of scissors.

These, of course, should also be subjected to boiling. If the sides of the sore should get dry, grease them with vasoline. Remember that a healthy body is all that can heal such a gap; internal remedies are of no account in this connection. Greasing the sides of the sore will make them knit together more quickly and easily. If the sore starts to run, it may be necessary to sponge it off as often as it needs it, with carbolic water.

Especially in fly time, flies will either lay eggs in the sore or carry infection to it, and it is necessary to keep them away. The Department of Agriculture recommends the following remedies to keep flies away from animal wounds:

Formula 1. Oil of tar, 8 ounces; cottonseed meal to make 32 ounces.
 Formula 2. Powdered naphthalin, 2 ounces; hydrous wool fat, 14 ounces.
 Formula 3. Coal tar, 12 ounces; carbon disulphid, 4 ounces.

Mix well and apply with a brush. These are mixed into an ointment. Remember that carbon disulphid easily turns into a gas, and so the bottle must be well stoppered. The mixture may be applied with a brush. Carbon disulphid is also highly inflammable, and so lights or heat should be kept away from it. In the case of a very bad wound, a skilled veterinarian should be called, but many times these cannot be had and so immediate action is necessary to prevent further injury to the animal.

The Wind and the Gypsy Moth.

The wind is directly responsible for the general spread of the gypsy moth in New England is the conclusion reached as the result of an investigation carried on by the Department of Agriculture in 1913 and 1914. It has been found that in the last forty years the pest has gained an average of five miles a year toward the Northeast in consequence of the Southwest which prevail in New England during the season most favorable for the dissemination of the moth larvae. To the northward, the gain has been at the rate of two and one-half miles per year, while in other directions the spread has been slower.

To prevent this spread continuing the badly infested areas near the border must be brought under control. This can be accomplished either by natural enemies or by hand methods, or by both. In the infested territory, its natural enemies are now performing important services. The quarantine on lumber products, Christmas trees, nursery stock, and some from the infested territory, also, it is believed, an efficient precaution against the spread of the pest into other sections of the United States. The necessity for hand work on the borders of the infested area is, however, emphasized by the evidence of the great part that the wind plays in disseminating the larvae. The maximum distance that it is known larvae have been carried by the wind is 13 1-2 miles.

A VENTURE IN GEESSE RAISING.

By Mrs. Sarah E. Bates Bartlett.
 The third type of animal marriage is that common among wild geese, pigeons and doves. The union lasts through life, and if one of the pair dies the other seeks a second mate, but mourns disconsolately till death. The swan is a large web-footed bird like the goose. The loon is a swimming, diving bird of the arctic regions, her egg is the size of a goose egg, and is of a light gray color. I have seen their nests and had their eggs in my hand.

I bought a pair of geese in the fall, and along in March they began to lay; at the same time, so I couldn't tell what luck I might have with them. It was said by those who raised geese, "if the gander proved to be good to the goslings, I should have good luck," and he was. I gave them the best care I could, for I thought I had undertaken quite a venture. The gander and I did not have but one quarrel, and we settled it on the spot. Faithful old birdie, I treated him so roughly, but I had to fight just then, for he struck me so hard with the bone end of his wing it really hurt me. I was afraid I had killed him, for he lay on the ground a minute, then got up and went out and took his place beside his mate. She came off soon after with eight or nine little goslings, one or two of which soon after died. I took them away and decided I would bring them up by hand, as there were only six then. I thought in that way I would get another brood, for I had bought another goose, and was in hopes I might see them both at the same time which I did. They hatched very well, and I had a pretty flock. As soon as they got strong enough I put the two flocks together. I did not expect they would accept of my flock, but my wise and brave old gander resolved not to have any idols in his family, and all swimming happy together. The little ones I had cared for so long, could not forget me so easily and every time they saw me out they would leave the rest and come to me. The gander would always stand and look so distressed but never gave me a battle. The other geese and the flock of goslings would always leave him standing on guard as it seemed.

One day I heard him calling very loud, qua, qua, qua. I could see the other geese off some ways from where he stood, mother geese had indeed "forgotten" her children. I judged from the loud calling there must be some trouble, so went up into the pasture, and there the gander stood beside a place where some of the goslings had dropped into a place where the water had washed out (it was a very springy and wet place) and quite a large brook run along there too. I got a hoe and dug away till I found three of my little goslings, the faithful old gander all the time standing by and not offering any objections, for we had an understanding. As soon as I pulled the last one out he stepped along, put his head down to them in a loving way, and jabbered away as though he was trying to comfort them.

The garden was near by the pasture, and seemed to offer them many attractions, but as my dear old gander understood me so well when he could hear me I did not have much trouble, for he would quickly lead them out of mischief, as well as lead them in.

I plucked them all twice, and the gander once extra for his sauce to me on one occasion. I used to put a stocking on over his head when I plucked him, I got many a pinch, and there would be many black and blue spots on my arms the next day. The feathers I made a nice pair of pillows which have been in use fifty-five years, and they are nice and fluffy now.

This snowy white, pretty flock of geese I can say was an "object lesson" to me all summer, for as I could see them any time separated off into two flocks, I could see the gander put his spadelike bill down around trying to help a little weak gosling on his feet again, that had tottled over in a hollow place and laid on his back; he would leave them till they could all follow along with him, but not so the mother geese for "she had forgotten." I had a flock of eighteen in the fall thanks to my wise old gander.

I was often reminded of that passage in the Bible which says, "Can a mother forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on her? Yea, they may forget, yet will I not for get you. I have graven you on the palms of my hands." Isaiah 49:15.

Not Paint

With linseed oil at 50c to $1, what sort of oil do you think they use in "paint" at $1.50 and $1.25?

That stuff is counterfeited paint. You can cheat yourself; you can't cheat Time or Weather.

Paint is a rubbery coat over wood and iron to keep out water.

Counterfeited paint may look like it; counterfeited money looks like money.

What are all counterfeits for? They are all alike.

SOUTH PARIS

Mrs. John S. Brown.

Mrs. Faustina C. wife of John S. Brown, died at her home in South Paris on Monday, August 23. Mrs. Brown was the daughter of Melvin and Frances (York) Stowe, was born in Newry, Maine June 13, 1833.

She was educated in the public schools and Goulet Academy, and was a successful teacher for several years. She was married June 19, 1879 to John S. Brown of Newry, where they made their home and three sons were born to them.

It was while living there and the children were small, she used to gather the children of the neighborhood at her home on Sunday afternoon for a little religious service and Sunday school.

Years ago she came with her family to South Paris. She was a member of the Universalist Church and prominent in the work of the Grange.

Her illness covers a little more than eight months, much of the time around and out as usual, but confined to her bed the last four weeks, from which she directed the work of the home, keeping in close touch with all the little details up to a few days of her death. She loved her home and family and often said, "I want to get well, but it is all right."

The end came peacefully.

The funeral was held at the home, attended by Rev. Chester G. Miller and burial was at sunset in Riverside Cemetery. The silver gray casket was covered and surrounded by beautiful flowers, a silent tribute of neighbors and friends.

Besides her husband, she leaves three sons, Sanford M. of South Paris, Everett D. and D. Grover, who are teachers in Porto Rico. Mrs. Brown is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Teresa S. Grover and Mrs. Susie E. Chapman both of South Paris.

Her immediate family and a large circle of friends, her memory is blessed. "One can never think of death with such ease. It is life, always life, and life more abundant."

"We cannot really think of her as being far away. Her love, we trust, is with us still, unfading day by day. For God's Love, and we but feel our Father would not part the heart in the soul, which through his love, gleaming star, which sheds its ray of light. An inspiration into us, which quickens, deepens, leads us on, yea, heavenward, as such examples must."

"Until that wondrous glory breaks, when some day you and I approach the 'glorious star' to find our loved ones, dear, beloved, blessed ones, who journey on before. 'O death! Where is thy sting?' O grave! 'Thy life forevermore.'"

Rich Cloth Upholstery

Like many high priced cars the 1916 Overland, Model 83, is upholstered in cloth.

This finely-woven, worsted material has many advantages that make it preferable to imitation or split-leather, such as is used on cars of similar price.

Cloth is more comfortable—cooler in summer and warmer in winter—and it does not wear slippery.

There is no surface coloring matter to come off and mar light clothing. It makes slip-covers unnecessary.

The rich appearance of this dark grey striped cloth is set off to advantage by black leather trimming, used around the tops of the seat backs, and around the edges of the doors.

And it retains its rich appearance indefinitely, for unlike leather it will not crack or peel. And being dyed in the wool it will not fade or change color.

A light brushing will remove dust from its smooth surface, and soap and water will take out grease or oil spots.

In wearing quality this Overland cloth has every advantage as an upholstering material. The under side is waterproofed by special process. It is the sort of upholstery you will want in your new automobile.

THE FARMER AND THE BANKER

Are necessary to each other. The Norway National Bank realizes this and knows that the farmers in this State can be helped on to success by the granting of reasonable loans at fair interest for proper lengths of time.

The loaning of money by those possessing a surplus to those in need of it is what makes business possible and enables the wheels of progress to turn. We are always glad to discuss the matter of a loan with any farmer who means business and has some character as well as a farm to back up his application for financial assistance.

Mr. Farmer, open an account and become acquainted. The Bank always takes care of its depositors first in granting loans and the knowledge of your financial affairs and character gained while you are a depositor enables the Bank to more readily loan you money when you are in need of financial assistance.

FRESH TOBACCO NEVER BITES;
Dry, Cut-up Tobacco Does

Real tobacco flavor depends upon the leaf being preserved in its natural state, possible only by pressing the leaves into plug form and keeping it in by covering it with a natural leaf wrapper. The natural flavor and strength of tobacco escape when cut or granulated.

Take a Plug of Sickle that is even thoroughly dried out so that when you whittle it off it crumbles into dust, but it will burn and smoke smooth and cool as it has all of its original tobacco flavor preserved, unevaporated in Plug Form.

Whittling a pipeful is little trouble, amply repaid both quality and quantity. Try this experiment and judge for yourself.

John Evans of Sweden, in company with Mrs. A. M. Lehman, wife of one of the directors of Camp Wigwam at South Waterford, barely escaped death a few days ago on the Waterford road, when the car, a Ford runabout, owned by Mr. Evans, ran off the bridge and turned turtle into the stream below, a distance of about two feet.

As they were coming around a bend, they met a large touring car on the bridge and the small car was crowded off the bridge. Mr. Evans was pinned under the car, with just his head out of water. The occupants of the large car gave all assistance possible and with the help of J. B. Allen, succeeded in getting him from under the car.

He and Mrs. Lehman were taken at once to Waterford and physicians summoned who found Mr. Evans with three broken fingers and three broken ribs. Mrs. Lehman suffered no broken bones, but both were severely shaken up. The car was damaged to the extent of a new body.

STATE OF MAINE

County of Oxford, ss.

To the Honorable Judge of the Supreme Judicial Court, next to be holden at Paris, within and for the County of Oxford, on the second Tuesday of October, A. D. 1915.

Respectfully represents B. D. Dries of said County, whose maiden name was Lulu B. Lewis, that she was lawfully married to Marvin E. Dries, then of Lebanon, Pennsylvania, at Dover in the State of New Hampshire on the eleventh day of June, A. D. 1910, and thereafter lived and cohabited with her said husband, as man and wife, at Kezar Falls, Denmark and Bridgton in said State of Maine, where her libellant has always resided in good faith since her marriage, that no children have been born to them.

D. 1912, utterly desert her libellant, which said utter desertion has continued for three consecutive years next prior to the filing of this libel, and still continues.

Your libellant further avers that the residence of the said libellee, Marvin E. Dries, is not known to her, and cannot be ascertained by reasonable diligence. Wherefore your libellant prays right and justice and that a divorce from the bonds of matrimony existing between her and her said husband may be decreed to her.

Dated this seventeenth day of August, A. D. 1915.
